How Can New Therapists Best Handle the Evolution of Their Social Identity?

by Bernadette Py

Because the vast majority of us human beings—regardless of our profession—have multiplied our profiles on the Web (Facebook, Twitter, LinkedIn, etc.), what might be the impact of such exposure on the transference aspect of the therapeutic relationship? More precisely, for those of us who are currently making or are about to make the transition from a job in which social media presence is essential to a psychotherapy practice, are there any guidelines and possibly some sound advice we should follow?

I personally have worked as a communication and PR professional for the past 30 years. As a result, my name, some of my professional accomplishments, my posts (including some personal photographic material) are now embedded in these sprawling giant networks. It seems to me they are rather easily accessible to potential clients, whether they are computer geeks or not, who might be interested in finding out more about me.

Because deleting social network profiles or search engine referencing can actually be a long and difficult process, I have tried to identify a few of the elements needed to answer these questions:

- How might clients be impacted by easy access to their therapist’s social identity?
- When a person becomes a psychotherapist as a second career, how can he or she best handle the development of his or her online profile?
- Is it a good thing for psychotherapists to be present on social networks and are there boundaries that should not be exceeded?

I set out to interview several experienced psychotherapists as well as supervisors. Here I will try to synthesize our exchanges and add a few personal observations and conclusions in the hope that these will generate further commentary and reactions and open up an interesting discussion.

First of all, my interactions with experienced therapists lead me to believe that, while it is undoubtedly desirable to be a smooth projection surface to facilitate the establishment of the transference relationship and to limit psychological games as much as possible, it is rather unrealistic to believe that we therapists can be 100% “smooth,” which in French psychotherapy lingo means to have nothing sticking out that would prevent clients from projecting whatever they need to onto us. Even if we receive our clients in a neutral environment, devoid of any personal photos or objects, it is highly likely that they will see us through such things as our physical posture, our clothes, and the way we groom ourselves (hairstyle, makeup, jewelry, etc.). And in a way, this is probably a good thing. To quote French psychoanalyst Gérard Bonnet (1997, 3 February), “The major difference between a psychoanalyst and a psychotherapist is that the psychotherapist is a real person.” Although there is an obvious need to work within a frame, allowing a few personal elements to rise to the surface might not prove automatically harmful, especially because that material can be elaborated on and analyzed during therapy sessions.

When one changes careers to become a psychotherapist, I am tempted to believe that questions about how to best handle the evolution of one’s online social identity are a reflection of how difficult this transition is for the person involved. After several years of training during which one is torn between a professional activity that pays the rent and the new vocation to which one aspires, it can be understandably difficult to let one go and embrace the other in a heartbeat!

When we reach that stage, it is likely that we all have to determine our own answers to some of these personal questions: Who are we at this particular time of transition? How do we wish to present ourselves? What is our essence? And this will obviously be reflected in how we choose to present ourselves on social networks.

More simply, I think that this particular moment would be the right time to choose what to emphasize and not simply to pile more positions, training, and experiences onto the same LinkedIn profile, for example. These choices will testify to our own personal evolution, to our capacity to make the transition and position ourselves as a therapist, to stand our newly acquired ground. Similarly, it seems wise to exercise vigilance with regard to the impact of Facebook posts, both past and present, because they remain easily accessible in spite of various privacy and security systems offered by the network.

All the experienced therapists with whom I talked shared the same opinion regarding new technologies, the Internet, and social networks. These days, it is unrealistic to believe that one can do entirely without these new communication tools. As a result, it is probably wiser to look at them in a positive way in order to make the best possible use of them and to set our own limits with clear judgment. One therapist might benefit from search engine indexing of his own website; another might decide not to work with clients on Skype because she does not think she can be effective that way.

To summarize what I learned from professional psychotherapists:

- Prune one’s LinkedIn profile to clearly position oneself as a psychotherapist
- Take care about the nature of one’s Facebook posts (avoid personal photos, intimate details or declarations)
- Do not accept one’s clients as Facebook friends because this will likely undermine the therapeutic relationship and frame
- If a client mentions your previous professional experience, use his interest as material to be elaborated on in the psychotherapy
- Allow the search engine indexing of his own website; another might decide not to work with clients on Skype because she does not think she can be effective that way.

I think it is the winding road of our entire life journey—previous professional experiences included—that has led us to this new therapist vocation. The wealth of our comprehensive life experience is one of our many assets. Let us not deny any part of it because to do so would mean we are denying a part of ourselves.

About the Educational Transactional Analysis Journal

The Edukacyjna Analiza Transakcyjna [Educational Transactional Analysis Journal] is aimed at educators, teachers, psychologists, and people dealing with transactional analysis in theory and practice. It is designed to serve as a source of inspiration for all those who are beginning their adventure with Berne’s concepts and have already recognized its potential. The first issue was published in 2012. The guiding principle for its editorial team was to create a journal embracing a wide range of perspectives about the theory and practical applications of transactional analysis in education. Thus, the main objective of the journal is the exchange of ideas related to:

- Using transactional analysis concepts in the theory of education and child rearing
- Using educational transactional analysis in practical work with children, youth, and adults
- Analyzing communication between teachers and students and considering the significance of life script in the educational process
- Preventing negative phenomena in the school environment through the interpretation of games
- Looking at other issues linked with widely understood educational phenomena and inspirations

Dear Suriya:

I read your article in the January Script this morning. It touched me deeply—so beautifully, passionately written. I wanted to cheer, and I wanted to cry. You have issued a call, an invitation, and a challenge to our members. Thank you so very much. Our world is in so much trouble (we can add to the list of tragedies the massive floods and tornadoes in the American Midwest and South that displaced millions of people during the holidays) with the violence that is inundating our communities and countries. There cannot be too many calls for decency and responsibility.

With heartfelt gratitude,
Bill Cornell

Dear Suriya:

We met briefly in San Francisco when you were still president elect. I have just read your article in the January 2016 issue of The Script and wanted to respond with strong support! Thank you so much for putting social responsibility on the front cover. I really appreciated your words and the use of your position to say them to our community.

I also want to let you know that I am the chair of the diversity and social responsibility committee for the United Kingdom Association for Transactional Analysis (UKATA). I am hoping to engage folks here with the challenges we face in this realm. Are there such committees for the South Asian Association of Transactional Analysts (SAATA) or for ITAA? If so, I was wondering if it would be good for us to connect up.

We have a UKATA newsletter that comes out every quarter called The Transactional Analyst and have started a regular column in it about these issues. I have just submitted a piece entitled “Diversity and Social Responsibility: Request for Shared Training Experiences” for the next issue. I’m sharing it with you to offer you some insight as to the sort of challenges we face with diversity in transactional analysis in the UK. Much of this is relevant for the field of psychotherapy, but I think it also applies across all fields.

Happy new year, and I hope you are enjoying your time in office!

Best wishes,
Karen Minikin

Editors’ Note: Efforts are underway to reenliven the group started in 2010 by Len Campos called Transactional Analysts for Social Responsibility (TAFSR). If you are interested in joining, please write to Suriya at suriya.sunshine@gmail.com.

Hi Suriya:

I enjoyed reading your article “Reaching Out in Difficult Times” in the January Script. It was well written and to the point. I hope transactional analysts will take your message seriously. As you know, I’ve spent years trying to get that word out to TA folks, even suggesting that we get out of our four-cornered fields box and into the real world community where transactional analysis can be used to address social problems. I believe doing so represents social transactional analysis, the fifth field of TA.

Thanks for acknowledging my formation of Transactional Analysts for Social Responsibility (TAFSR), which lasted 3 years and fizzled out for lack of leadership support. It was to be replaced by a special section on social responsibility in The Script, but that didn’t last long either. The saying that 3% of people do most of the work of social change while 97% remain passively “hopeful” about it is still valid. Perhaps that’s just human nature.

You will note that recently I have focused my TAJ articles and conference workshops on the application of TA to social problems such as racism, social conflicts, and war. These have included contributions on redecision therapy and social justice (2010), beyond script destiny (2010), cultivating cultures of courage with TA (2012), the power of social TA (2013), a transactional analytic view of war and peace (2014), ending the game of war with the help of TA (2014), and cultural scripting for forever wars (2015). I would like to see other authors take up similar topics at our conferences and in our publications worldwide and then let the rest of us know about their work.

I also stay active locally in the Sacramento, California, action groups such as Therapists for Social Responsibility and the Peace Action Network. Again, thanks for your article in The Script. May it have the influence it deserves.

Warm regards,
Leonard Campos

2016 EATA Conference to Focus on “Identity, Integration, Boundaries”

by Sylvie Monin

The 2016 conference of the European Association for Transactional Analysis will focus on a theme that is deeply relevant in our troubled times: “Identity, Integration, Boundaries.” This 40th anniversary conference, cosponsored with Association Suisse d’Analyse Transactionnelle-Suisse-Romande (ASAT-SR), will take place in Geneva, Switzerland, 7-9 July.

Today, with increasing numbers of migrants in Europe and elsewhere around the world, there is a sense of rising anxiety and insecurity as well as fear of the other and differences. This conference will focus on what our transactional analysis community has to offer in the face of such tremendous changes and how we as transactional analysts can take on our social responsibility. In Geneva we will reflect on questions such as these: How can we encourage mutual respect in the face of growing anxiety and insecurity and in the midst of multiple frames of reference? How do we find our bearings in a world that is constantly changing? How can we protect our integrity individually and as communities or countries while integrating people from many cultures? What are the needs of people to link their cultural, social, and political script with the cultural, social, and political script of the country to which they migrate?

Our aim is to consider these questions by involving practitioners from different fields of specialization and modalities along with key experts and speakers. Among the keynote speakers are the following:

Françoise Sironi is a psychologist, psychotherapist, lecturer in clinical and pathological psychology (University Paris 8 Vincennes Saint-Denis), and an expert in the psychology of criminals/war criminals. She has served as an expert witness for various international and national penal courts. Her research is based on clinical experience with victims of torture, massacres, genocide, and political violence. She also created a new clinical/therapeutic field and approach called geopolitical clinical psychology.

Catherine Wihtol de Wenden is a political scientist and jurist and was the first in France to place international migration in the context of political science and international relations. She has worked on issues related to European migration, including migration from East to West after the fall of the Berlin Wall, the development of European policy on migration and asylum, the part of Islam in the definition of citizenship, civil community life within immigrant populations, the global and globalized approach of migrations in relation to the theme of opening and closing borders, and the global and globalized governance of migrations.

You can read more about these speakers and the conference in general at http://www.eata2016.org, including the symposia in each field of specialization scheduled for Friday 8 July.

Sylvie Monin is the project lead for the 2016 EATA Conference. She can be reached at sylvie.monin@bluewin.ch.
With sadness we mourn the death of Evan Sherrard, the founder of transactional analysis in Auckland, New Zealand. He died in hospital on 20 October 2015, aged almost 81, and was honored at a huge funeral at St. Luke’s, Remuera, where he was still part of the ministry team.

Evan was a man of tremendous vision and energy. After his ordination as a Presbyterian minister in Dunedin, he took his wife and two children to Houston, Texas, for 2 years of training in clinical pastoral education and theology. They returned to Dunedin, where he set up a counseling service, the Cameron Centre. Realizing he needed more training, he took the family back to the United States for 5 years in Michigan, where he gained high qualifications in chaplaincy supervision, adult education, and transactional analysis, including a month’s training with Bob and Mary Goulding in redecision therapy.

Back in New Zealand, Evan was invited to set up a community service in Auckland, which he called the Human Development Team (HDT). They set about providing skilled training and supervision for a wide range of community services and invited a series of overseas trainers to offer workshops, especially in transactional analysis, psychodrama, and gestalt. When the HDT first offered an internship in counseling and psychotherapy in 1984, I was lucky to be one of that training group and later became a member of the team.

Evan linked with the other emerging TA leaders in New Zealand, all training under Ian McDougall and then Robin Maslen to become TSTAs. From about 1991 on they met together every 2 years in a week-long multilevel residential event organized by Charlotte Daellenbach in which the TSTAs gave their time for free to coach the rising PTSTAs, who themselves led groups of CTAs in training. This structure has continued successfully while evolving with circumstances.

Evan brought a number of ITAA leaders to New Zealand, including Muriel James and the Gouldings. In 1992 he chaired the international ITAA conference held in Auckland, and by 1996 Evan had qualified as a TSTA himself while training concurrently in psychodrama. He was also much involved in ethical issues for the church.

During the 1990s, Evan helped to set up the psychotherapy department at Auckland Institute of Technology, where he taught a rigorous 2-year TA course for several years.

He put energy into helping to lift the standards of the New Zealand Association of Psychotherapists and was later elected a Life Member. In 2000 he was a founding codirector of the Auckland TA Training Institute, leading it till 2014.

Through all of this, his wife Isabelle, was a strong support, especially when their daughter Susan suffered an accident that left her a quadriplegic. Between them, they helped Susan to create a remarkable life of her own. And the family supported Evan through his own health crises with cancer and heart surgery during the last 20 years.

We all miss Evan’s warm-hearted presence, his cheeky humor, his perceptiveness and care for those who were suffering, his willingness to confront injustice, and his commitment to working for a better society.

A book about his life and work is being produced by Keith Tudor and Jonathan Fay.

Our thanks to Margaret Bowater, TSTA (P), for these reflections; email mbowater@clear.net.nz.

A. Geethan writes about a 3-day workshop in Chennai, India, in October 2015 sponsored by Nibbana Institute for Organisational Development entitled “Leadership Coaching and Organizational Development” with Bernd Schmid from Germany. The workshop was the culmination of an exchange of organizational development experience over the past 3 years between Bernd Schmid and Geethan, the head of Nibbana. The workshop drew a sizeable audience that included senior managers from leading organizations and upcoming entrepreneurs. The focus was on building a learning culture in organizations, and participants were exposed to radically new concepts about leadership and organizational development by Bernd. (The workshop was videotaped and is available here.) During the workshop, a book titled The Guided Journey of a Caterpillar, coauthored by Bernd and Geethan, was released. It describes how Bernd mentored Geethan to develop a systemic frame of reference when working with organizations. The book release event was organized by Madras Management Association, one of the prestigious management associations in India, and was attended by more than 200 people. Mr. Chandramohan, Managing Director of Hatsun Agro Products, the largest private dairy in India, was the chief guest. (An e-copy of the book is being released shortly.)
Successful Exams Held in St. Petersburg, Russia, and Nivelles, Belgium

St. Petersburg Exams

by Elena Soboleva

I am pleased to report that the EATA Council of Certification (COC) exams held in St. Petersburg, Russia, in November 2015 were a big success, with more than 20 EATA examiners and candidates participating from Russia, Holland, Slovenia, the United Kingdom, France, Italy, Ukraine, and Switzerland. We felt brave to hold these exams in our complex world, and we learned a lot, including that it is possible to organize exams in Russia in spite of some obstacles. I want to thank COC chair Sue Eusden and EATA observer Alessandra Pierini for their kind support as I coordinated the exams from Russia. Thanks also to:

Examiners: Marijke Arendsen Hein (TSTA-P, C, Holland), Hanna Parhodko (PTSTA-P, Ukraine), Boris Volodin (PTSTA-P, Russia), Barbara Repinc Zupancic (PTSTA-P, Slovenia), Paula Dishman (PTSTA-P, UK), Liselotte Fassbind-Kech (TSTA-C, Switzerland), Dmitri Shustov (TSTA-P, Russia), Armelle Brunot (PTSTA-P, France), Ekaterina Bulgakova (PTSTA-P, Ukraine), Diana Kononova (PTSTA-P, Russia), and Nadezhda Zuykova (PTSTA-P, Russia).

The President of SITA Elena Gamzina and members of the council Marina Sokovnina, Alevtina Kravtsova (who was also a candidate), Victoria Trofimova, Inna Kochurova, and Elena Soboleva

Volunteers: Tatiana Williams, Irina Beliavtsova, and Jlia Gradova

Translators: Anna Filinskaya, Sergey Makov, Oksana Nizhevsksaya, Alexander Shustov, and Elena Smolonogina

Our new CTAs are Tatiana Agibalova, Alevtina Kravtsova, and Victoria Dvojnishnikova of Russia and Zarina Sevalneva of Ukraine.

Reflecting on the exams, new CTA Zarina Sevalneva (Ukraine) writes, “I want to thank the SITA Council for organizing the exams. You were the first to show the way for new TA opportunities for Eastern Europe and created a safe space for open communications and removed language barriers. Through your courage to be the first professional organization to care for and recognize our candidates, I felt safe, relevant, and important.”
Barbara Repinc Zupancic of Slovenia offered, “Our Russian colleagues did a great job. Unfortunately, while we were there the plane from St. Petersburg crashed in Egypt, so the city was in mourning. Seeing people there grieving intensified my thoughts about my role as a TA person in the world and how I can influence the lives of others from an OK-OK position. The exams were a chance to see how people from different countries, cultures, language groups, religions, and habits can create a positive exam atmosphere. These exams were also a historic moment for EATA because they were the first held in Russia.”

Elena Gamzina, President of SITA, says, “The idea to organize EATA exams in Russia was brought to the SITA Council by Elena Soboleva, our delegate to EATA. I am thrilled that SITA could accomplish the exams so successfully and happy that all the candidates passed!”

Special thanks to Marijke Arendsen Hein and Liselotte Fassbind-Kech for the workshops they offered in conjunction with the exams. It was also helpful for the trainees who hope to take their exams in the future to participate in a mock exam. We have all lived a wonderful exam experience!

Examiner Boris Volodin of Russia writes, “This is one of the most important events in my professional life, a wonderful process that was incredible in its personal and professional depth.”

The South Asian Association of Transactional Analysts (SAATA), in partnership with Ain o Salish Kendra (ASK), is pleased to sponsor the 2016 South Asian Transactional Analysis Conference in Dhaka. The hope is to inspire and provide opportunities for professional growth and development and to showcase practicing TA therapists in this part of the world to an international TA community. IBOC examinations will take place on 1 September 2016. The conference is open to all aspirants of personal and professional growth and change: therapists, counselors, physicians, educators, consultants, trainers, corporate executives, coaches, parents, students, and others. The program will include a preconference institute and exams, plenaries/keynote speeches, lectures, workshops, and poster presentations. In addition, the annual ITAA Board of Trustees meeting and the annual general meetings of the ITAA and the SAATA will occur in conjunction with the conference.

The IBOC exams in Dhaka will be held on 1 September 2016. They will be limited to 2 TSTA and 4-6 CTA candidates. Please apply early if you are interested in being examined there.
